

CREATING HEALTHY CITIES

Summit 2015

30 NOVEMBER & 1 DECEMBER 2015, MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA

Informed by the latest international research and best practice examples, the Summit will present solutions for thriving and liveable cities.

Nine out of ten Australians, and more than half the world's people, now live in cities. Our urban centres are engines of enterprise, rich in diversity and opportunity. But they also face enormous challenges, as urban growth, changing demographics, and congestion place increasing pressure on infrastructure, health, and the environment.

The recent appointment of a Federal Minister for Cities and the Built Environment underscores the importance of Australian cities to our nation's economy and our quality of life, and the urgency of confronting the challenges they face as we approach the mid-21st century. There is also growing international recognition that human-centred design, as well as personal and community health and well-being, are intimately linked to the performance of our cities.

Join leading Australian and international thinkers, to explore how we can build cities for the needs of today and tomorrow, and influence the national policy agenda for the betterment of Australian cities.
